Launching a New Republic 1789–1800

Section 1
Washington’s Presidency

Section 2
Challenges to the New Government

Section 3
The Federalists in Charge

1789 George Washington inaugurated as president.
1789 French Revolution begins.
1791 The first Bank of the United States is established.
1791 Slaves revolt in Santo Domingo.
1792 Washington reelected president.
1793 French king Louis XVI executed; Reign of Terror begins in France.
1794 Whiskey Rebellion occurs.
The year is 1789, and George Washington has been inaugurated as the first president of the United States. It quickly becomes obvious to you and to others that the president will need help. He chooses people with different talents and experience to help him govern.

What kind of person would you choose to help you govern?

What Do You Think?

- Why might you want people with different viewpoints in your government?
- What do you think your biggest challenges would be?

Visit the Chapter 9 links for more information about the new republic.
Identifying and Solving Problems

What Do You Know?
What do you think of when you hear the words democracy and republic? Why do you think the citizens and leaders of the new country wanted to establish a republic governed by laws?

Think About
• the experience of the colonists under British rule
• the effect of the Revolutionary War and the period immediately after the war
• your responses to the Interact with History about choosing people to govern (see page 291)

What Do You Want to Know?
What questions do you have about the people who created the U.S. government? Record your questions in your notebook before you read the chapter.

Identifying and Solving Problems
As you read history, try to identify problems in past times and the solutions that people came up with to solve their problems. A graphic organizer such as the chart below can help you to keep track of problems and their solutions. In the middle of the chart, four headings categorize the major issues faced by the young nation. Copy the chart into your notebook and then record problems and the proposed solutions in each category.

PROBLEMS
- Economics
- Politics
- Foreign Affairs
- Relations with Native Americans

SOLUTIONS
Washington’s Presidency

MAIN IDEA
The president and the Congress began to set up the new government.

WHY IT MATTERS NOW
The strength of the U.S. today is due to the decisions of the Founders about how to organize the government.

TERMS & NAMES
- inaugurate
- Federal Judiciary Act
- cabinet
- tariff

ONE AMERICAN’S STORY
Charles Thomson had served as secretary of the Continental Congress in 1774. Now, on April 14, 1789, he came to Mount Vernon in Virginia with a letter for George Washington. Washington knew the reason for the visit. Thomson’s letter was to tell him that he had been elected the nation’s first president. Before giving Washington the letter, Thomson made a short speech.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST
I have now Sir to inform you that . . . your patriotism and your readiness to sacrifice . . . private enjoyments to preserve the liberty and promote the happiness of your Country [convinced the Congress that you would accept] this important Office to which you are called not only by the unanimous votes of the Electors but by the voice of America.

Charles Thomson, quoted in Washington’s Papers, Library of Congress

As you will read in this section, Washington accepted the honor and the burden of his new office. He guided the nation through its early years.

Washington Takes Office
Washington had been elected only a few months before. Each member of the electoral college had written down two names. The top vote-getter, Washington, became president. The runner-up, John Adams, became vice-president. Washington left Mount Vernon on April 16, 1789. He traveled north through Baltimore and Philadelphia to New York City, the nation’s capital. On April 30 at Federal Hall, Washington was inaugurated, or sworn in, as president. John Adams of Massachusetts was his vice-president.
As the nation's first president, Washington faced a difficult task. He knew that all eyes would be on him. His every action as president would set a precedent—an example that would become standard practice. People argued over what to call him. Some, including John Adams, suggested “His Excellency” or “His Highness.” Others argued that such titles would suggest that he was a king. The debate tied up Congress for a month. Finally, “Mr. President” was agreed upon. Congress had to settle other differences about how the new government should be run.

Setting Up the Courts

The writers of the Constitution had left many matters to be decided by Congress. For example, the Constitution created a Supreme Court but left it to Congress to decide the number of justices. Leaders also argued about how much power the Supreme Court should have. One reason for disagreement was that the states already had their own courts. How would authority be divided between the state and federal courts?

To create a court system, Congress passed the Federal Judiciary Act of 1789. This act gave the Supreme Court six members: a chief justice, or judge, and five associate justices. Over time, that number has grown to nine. The act also provided for other lower, less powerful federal courts. Washington appointed John Jay, the prominent New York lawyer and diplomat, as chief justice.

Washington’s Cabinet

The Constitution also gave Congress the task of creating departments to help the president lead the nation. The president had the power to appoint the heads of these departments, who were to assist the president with the many issues and problems he had to face. These heads of departments became his cabinet.

The Congress created three departments. In his first major task as president, Washington chose talented people to run them. For secretary of war, he picked Henry Knox, a trusted general during the Revolution. It was Knox’s job to oversee the nation’s defenses. For secretary of state, Washington chose Thomas Jefferson. He had been serving as U.S. minister to France. The State Department oversaw relations between the United States and other countries. Washington turned to the brilliant Alexander Hamilton to be the secretary of the treasury. Hamilton had to manage the government’s money. The secretary’s ties to the president began during the war when he had served as one of Washington’s aides. To advise the government on legal matters, Washington picked Edmund Randolph as attorney general.

These department heads and the attorney general made up Washington's cabinet. The Constitution made no mention of a cabinet. However, Washington began the practice of calling his department heads together to advise him.

Economic Problems

As secretary of the treasury, Alexander Hamilton faced the task of straightening out the nation's finances. First of all, the new government needed to pay its war debts. During the Revolution, the United States had borrowed millions of dollars from France, the Netherlands, and Spain. Within the United States, merchants and other private citizens had loaned money to the government. State governments also had wartime debts to pay back. By 1789, the national debt totaled more than $52 million.

Most government leaders agreed that the nation must repay its debts to win the respect of both foreign nations and its own citizens. Hamilton saw that the new nation must assure other countries that it was responsible about money. These nations would do business with the United States if they saw that the country would pay its debts. If the nation failed to do so, no country would lend it money in the future.

Hamilton came up with a financial plan that reflected his belief in a strong central government. He thought the power of the national government should be stronger than that of the state governments. Hamilton also believed that government should encourage business and industry. He sought the support of the nation's wealthy merchants and manufacturers. He thought that the nation's prosperity depended on them. The government owed money to many of these rich men. By paying them back, Hamilton hoped to win their support for the new government.

Hamilton’s Financial Plan

In 1790, Hamilton presented his plan to Congress. He proposed three steps to improve the nation’s finances.

1. paying off all war debts
2. raising government revenues
3. creating a national bank

Hamilton wanted the federal government to pay off the war debts of the states. However, sectional differences arose over repayment of state debts. Virginia, Georgia, and many other Southern states had already repaid their debts and did not like being asked to help Northern states pay theirs.
Hamilton asked Thomas Jefferson of Virginia to help him gain Southern support. They reached a compromise. In exchange for Southern support of the plan, Northerners agreed to place the new nation’s capital in the South. The location chosen was on the Potomac River between Virginia and Maryland.

The secretary of the treasury favored tariffs. A tariff is a tax on imported goods. It serves two purposes: raising money for the government and encouraging the growth of American industry. The government placed the highest tariffs on foreign goods—such as shoes and textiles—that Americans bought in great quantities. This ensured a steady flow of income to the government. In addition, since tariffs made foreign goods more expensive, they encouraged people to buy American goods.

Hamilton also called for the creation of a national bank. Such a bank would meet many needs. It would give the government a safe place to keep money. It would also make loans to businesses and government. Most important, it would issue bank notes—paper money that could be used as currency. Overall, Hamilton’s plan would strengthen the central government. However, this worried Jefferson and Madison.

Interpreting the Constitution

Jefferson and Madison believed that the Constitution discouraged the concentration of power in the federal government. The Constitution’s writers had tried to make the document general enough so that it would be flexible. As a result, disagreements sometimes arose over the document’s meaning.

The debate over Hamilton’s plan for a national bank exposed differences about how to interpret the Constitution. Madison and Jefferson argued that the Constitution did not give the government the power to set up a bank. They believed in the strict construction—narrow or strict interpretation—of the Constitution. They stated that the government has only those powers that the Constitution clearly says it has. Therefore, since the Constitution does not mention a national bank, the government cannot create one.

Hamilton disagreed. He favored a loose construction—broad or flexible interpretation—of the Constitution. Pointing to the elastic clause in the document, he argued that the bank was “necessary and proper” to carry out the government’s duties. (See The Living Constitution, page 254.) According to this view, when the Constitution grants a power to Congress, it also grants Congress the “necessary and proper” means to carry out that power. Jefferson and Hamilton argued their positions to Washington. Hamilton won, and the Bank of the United States was set up in 1791. The president, meanwhile, was dealing with other challenges at home and abroad, which you will read about in Section 2.
Challenges to the New Government

MAIN IDEA
Washington established central authority at home and avoided war with European powers.

WHY IT MATTERS NOW
Washington’s policies at home and abroad set an example for later presidents.

TERMS & NAMES
Battle of Fallen Timbers
Treaty of Greenville
Whiskey Rebellion
French Revolution
neutral
Jay’s Treaty
Pinckney’s Treaty

ONE AMERICAN’S STORY
In the West, American settlers met fierce resistance from Native Americans. Chief Little Turtle of the Miami tribe of Ohio had won decisive victories against U.S. troops.

In 1793, the Miami again faced attack by American forces. Little Turtle warned his people about the troops led by General Anthony Wayne.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST
We have beaten the enemy twice under different commanders... The Americans are now led by a chief [Wayne] who never sleeps... We have not been able to surprise him. Think well of it... It would be prudent [wise] to listen to his offers of peace.

Little Turtle, quoted in The Life and Times of Little Turtle

While the council members weighed Little Turtle’s warning, President Washington was making plans to secure—guard or protect—the western borders of the new nation.

Securing the Northwest Territory
As a general, Washington had skillfully waged war. As the nation’s president, however, he saw that the country needed peace in order to prosper. But in spite of his desire for peace, he considered military action as trouble brewed in the Trans-Appalachian West, the land between the Appalachian Mountains and the Mississippi River. The 1783 Treaty of Paris had attempted to resolve the claims. The source of the trouble was competing claims for these lands. Some years later, however, Spain, Britain, the United States, and Native Americans claimed parts of the area as their own.

Spain held much of North America west of the Mississippi. It also claimed Florida and the port of New Orleans at the mouth of the Mississippi. For American settlers in the West, this port was key to trade. They carried their goods to market by flatboat down the Mississippi to New Orleans. They took Spanish threats to close the port very seriously. The Spanish also stirred up trouble between the white settlers and the Creeks, Choctaws, and other Native American groups in the Southeast.

The strongest resistance to white settlement came from Native Americans in the Northwest Territory. This territory was bordered by the Ohio River to the south and Canada to the north. Native Americans in that territory hoped to join together to form an independent Native American nation. In violation of the Treaty of Paris, the British still held forts north of the Ohio River. The British supported Native Americans in order to maintain their access to fur in these territories. Eventually, Native Americans and white settlers clashed over the Northwest Territory.

Battle of Fallen Timbers

Believing the Northwest Territory was critical to the security and growth of the new nation, Washington sent troops to the Ohio Valley. As you read in One American’s Story, this first federal army took a beating from warriors led by Little Turtle in 1790. The chief’s force came from many tribes, including the Shawnee, Ottawa, and Chippewa, who joined in a confederation to defeat the federal army.

After a second defeat in 1791 of an army headed by General Arthur St. Clair, Washington ordered another army west. This time Anthony Wayne, known as “Mad Anthony” for his reckless courage, was at its head.

The other chiefs ignored Little Turtle’s advice to negotiate. They replaced him with a less able leader. Expecting British help, Native American warriors gathered at British-held Fort Miami. On August 20, 1794, a fighting force of around 2,000 Native Americans clashed with Wayne’s troops. The site was covered with trees that had been struck down by a storm. The Native Americans were defeated in what became known as the Battle of Fallen Timbers.

Reading History

A. Making Inferences

What expectations might the Native Americans have had of the British as the tribes came into conflict with white settlers?

Skillbuilder Answers

1. Land surrendered by Native Americans in Treaty of Greenville
2. Rivers and lakes provided an easy way to move troops and supplies.

GEOGRAPHY SKILLBUILDER

Interpreting Maps

1. Region What does the yellow area of the map represent?
2. Location Why might the British forts be located near water?
The Native Americans retreated to Fort Miami. The British, not wanting war with the United States, refused to help them. The Battle of Fallen Timbers crushed Native American hopes of keeping their land in the Northwest Territory. Twelve tribes signed the Treaty of Greenville in 1795. They agreed to cede, or surrender, much of present-day Ohio and Indiana to the U.S. government.

The Whiskey Rebellion

Not long after the Battle of Fallen Timbers, Washington put another army into the field. The conflict arose over the government’s tax on whiskey, part of Hamilton’s financial plan. From Pennsylvania to Georgia, outraged farmers resisted the tax. For them, whiskey—and the grain it was made from—were important products.

Because of poor roads, backcountry farmers had trouble getting their grain to market. Crops such as wheat and rye were more easily carried to market in liquid form, so farmers made their grain into whiskey. A farmer’s horse could haul only two bushels of rye but could carry two barrels of rye whiskey. This was an amount equal to 24 bushels of the grain. In addition, their customers paid more for whiskey than grain. With little cash to buy goods, let alone pay the tax, farmers often traded whiskey for salt, sugar, and other goods. The farmers used whiskey as money to get whatever supplies they needed.

---

CITIZENSHIP TODAY

Obeying Rules and Laws

As the Whiskey Rebellion shows, since the earliest days of the republic our government has made laws and punished those who broke them. These laws affect not only adult citizens, but young people as well.

Today, for example, communities across the country are trying to control the problem of juvenile crime by imposing curfews on young people. These laws require minors to be off the streets after a certain time, often ten or eleven at night. Penalties can be harsh. In certain communities, minors who break curfew laws can be detained, and their parents can be fined.

People who favor curfews believe such laws cut crime. Those who oppose curfews think such limits are the responsibility of parents and not the government.
In the summer of 1794, a group of farmers in western Pennsylvania staged the Whiskey Rebellion against the tax. One armed group beat up a tax collector, coated him with tar and feathers, and stole his horse. Others threatened an armed attack on Pittsburgh.

Washington, urged on by Hamilton, was prepared to enforce the tax and crush the Whiskey Rebellion. They feared that not to act might undermine the new government and weaken its authority. Hamilton condemned the rebels for resisting the law.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST

Such a resistance is treason against society, against liberty, against everything that ought to be dear to a free, enlightened, and prudent people. To tolerate it were to abandon your most precious interests. Not to subdue it were to tolerate it.

Alexander Hamilton, The Works of Alexander Hamilton

In October 1794, General Henry Lee, with Hamilton at his side, led an army of 13,000 soldiers into western Pennsylvania to put down the uprising. As news of the army’s approach spread, the rebels fled. After much effort, federal troops rounded up 20 barefoot, ragged prisoners. Washington had proved his point. He had shown that the government had the power and the will to enforce its laws. Meanwhile, events in Europe gave Washington a different kind of challenge.

The French Revolution

In 1789, a financial crisis led the French people to rebel against their government. Inspired by the American Revolution, the French revolutionaries demanded liberty and equality, and set out to create a government based on the will of the people. At first, Americans supported the French Revolution. By 1792, however, the revolution had become very violent. Thousands of French citizens were massacred. Then, in 1793, Louis XVI, the king of France, was executed.

Other European monarchs believed the revolution threatened their own thrones. France soon declared war on Britain, Holland, and Spain. Britain led the fight against France. The war between France and Britain put the United States in an awkward position. France had been America’s ally in the Revolution against the British.

---

“Such a resistance is treason.”

Alexander Hamilton
A 1778 treaty still bound the two nations together. In addition, many saw France’s revolution as proof that the American cause had been just. Jefferson felt that a move to crush the French Revolution was an attack on liberty everywhere. Hamilton, though, pointed out that Britain was the United States’ most important trading partner, and British trade was too important to risk war.

In April 1793, Washington declared that the United States would remain neutral, not siding with one country or the other. He stated that the nation would be “friendly and impartial” to both sides. Congress then passed a law forbidding the United States to help either side.

Remaining Neutral

Britain made it hard for the United States to remain neutral. Late in 1792, the British began seizing the cargoes of American ships carrying goods from the French West Indies.

Washington sent Chief Justice John Jay to England for talks about the seizure of U.S. ships. Jay also hoped to persuade the British to give up their forts on the Northwest frontier. During the talks in 1794, news came of the U.S. victory at the Battle of Fallen Timbers. Fearing another entanglement, the British agreed to leave the Ohio Valley by 1796. In Jay’s Treaty, the British also agreed to pay damages for U.S. vessels they had seized. Jay failed, however, to open up the profitable British West Indies trade to Americans. Because of this, Jay’s Treaty was unpopular.

Like Jay, Thomas Pinckney helped the United States reduce tensions along the frontier. In 1795, Pinckney’s Treaty with Spain gave Americans the right to travel freely on the Mississippi River. It also gave them the right to store goods at the port of New Orleans without paying customs duties. In addition, Spain accepted the 31st parallel as the northern boundary of Florida and the southern boundary of the United States.

Meanwhile, more American settlers moved west. As you will read in the next section, change was coming back east as Washington stepped down.
The Federalists in Charge

Main Idea
The split between Hamilton and Jefferson led to the growth of political parties.

Why It Matters Now
The two-party system is still a major feature of politics in the United States.

Terms & Names
- Foreign policy
- Political party
- Alien and Sedition Acts
- States’ rights
- XYZ Affair

One American’s Story
In 1796, President George Washington decided that two terms in office was enough. But as he left office, he feared the growth of political parties would split the nation into enemy camps. In 1796, he wrote a final address to the nation.

A Voice From the Past
Let me now . . . warn you . . . against the [harmful] effects of the spirit of party. . . . This spirit, unfortunately . . . exists in different shapes in all governments . . . but in those of the popular form, it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

George Washington, Farewell Address

In his address, Washington warned of the dangers of political division, or what he termed “the spirit of party.” As you will see in this section, few people took his advice.

Washington Retires
Washington had come to the presidency greatly admired by the American people. Throughout his eight years in office (1789–1797), he had tried to serve as a symbol of national unity. In large part, he succeeded. During his second term, however, opponents of Jay’s Treaty led attacks on the president. Thomas Paine called Washington “treacherous in private friendship . . . and a hypocrite in public life” because he failed to support the French Revolution.

Washington saw such attacks as the outcome of political disagreements. In his farewell address, he warned that such differences could weaken the nation. Despite his advice, political parties became a part of American politics.
Americans listened more closely to Washington's parting advice on foreign policy—relations with the governments of other countries. He urged the nation’s leaders to remain neutral and “steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world.” He warned that agreements with foreign nations might work against U.S. interests. His advice served to guide U.S. foreign policy into the twentieth century.

Growth of Political Parties

Despite Washington’s warning against political parties, Americans were deeply divided over how the nation should be run. During Washington’s first term (1789–1792), Hamilton and Jefferson had hotly debated the direction the new nation should take. Then Jefferson returned to Virginia in 1793. During Washington’s second term, Madison took Jefferson’s place in the debates with Hamilton.

Both sides disagreed on how to interpret the Constitution and on economic policy. Hamilton favored the British government and opposed the French Revolution. Jefferson and Madison were the opposite. Hamilton fought for a strong central government. Jefferson and Madison feared such a government might lead to tyranny. They had different visions of what the nation should become. Hamilton wanted a United States in which trade, manufacturing, and cities grew. Jefferson and Madison pictured a rural nation of planters and farmers.

These differences on foreign and domestic policy led to the nation’s first political parties. A political party is a group of people that tries to promote its ideas and influence government. It also backs candidates for office. Together, Jefferson and Madison founded the Democratic-Republican Party. The party name reflected their strong belief in democracy and the republican system. Their ideas drew farmers and workers to the new party. Hamilton and his friends formed the Federalist Party. Many Northern merchants and manufacturers became Federalists.

---

The First Political Parties

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FEDERALISTS</th>
<th>DEMOCRATIC-REPUBLICANS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Strong national government</td>
<td>Limited national government</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fear of mob rule</td>
<td>Fear of rule by one person or a powerful few</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loose construction (interpretation) of the Constitution</td>
<td>Strict construction (interpretation) of the Constitution</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Favored national bank</td>
<td>Opposed national bank</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Economy based on manufacturing and shipping</td>
<td>Economy based on farming</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Supporters: lawyers, merchants, manufacturers, clergy</td>
<td>Supporters: farmers, tradespeople</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

SKILLBUILDER Interpreting Charts

1. Which economic interests were served by the Federalists?
2. Which party favored a ruling elite? Which put more trust in the common people?
In 1796, the United States held its first elections in which political parties competed. The Federalists picked Washington’s vice-president, John Adams, as their candidate for president. An experienced public servant, Adams had been a leader during the Revolution and at the Continental Congress. He had also been a diplomat in France, the Netherlands, and Britain before serving with Washington. The Democratic-Republicans chose Jefferson.

In the electoral college, Adams received 71 votes and Jefferson 68. The Constitution stated that the runner-up should become vice-president. Therefore, the country had a Federalist president and a Democratic-Republican vice-president. Adams became president in 1797. His chief rival, Jefferson, entered office as his vice-president. In 1800, Adams became the first president to govern from the nation’s new capital city, Washington, D.C.

Problems with France

When Washington left office in 1797, relations between France and the United States were tense. With Britain and France still at war, the French began seizing U.S. ships to prevent them from trading with the British. Within the year, the French had looted more than 300 U.S. ships.

Although some Federalists called for war with France, Adams hoped talks would restore calm. To this end, he sent Charles Pinckney, Elbridge Gerry, and John Marshall to Paris. Arriving there, they requested a meeting with the French minister of foreign affairs. For weeks, they were ignored. Then three French agents—later referred to as X, Y, and Z—took the Americans aside to tell them the minister would hold talks. However, the talks would occur only if the Americans agreed to loan France $10 million and to pay the minister a bribe of $250,000. The Americans refused. “No, no, not a sixpence,” Pinckney shot back.

Adams received a full report of what became known as the XYZ Affair. After Congress and an outraged public learned of it, the press turned Pinckney’s words into a popular slogan: “Millions for defense, not one cent for tribute!” In 1798, Congress canceled its treaties with France and allowed U.S. ships to seize French vessels. Congress also set aside money to expand the navy and the army.

The Alien and Sedition Acts

The conflict with France made Adams and the Federalists popular with the public. Many Democratic-Republicans, however, were sympathetic to France. One Democratic-Republican newspaper called Adams “the blasted tyrant of America.” In turn, Federalists labeled Democratic-Republicans “democrats, mobcrats, and other kinds of rats.”

Angered by criticism in a time of crisis, Adams blamed the Democratic-Republican newspapers and new immigrants. Many of the immigrants were Democratic-Republicans. To silence their critics, the Federalist Congress passed the Alien and Sedition Acts in 1798. These acts targeted aliens—immigrants who were not yet citizens. One act increased the waiting period for becoming a U.S. citizen from 5 to 14 years. Other acts gave the president the power to arrest disloyal aliens or order them out of the country during wartime. A fourth act outlawed sedition, saying or writing anything false or harmful about the government.

With these acts, the Federalists clamped down on freedom of speech and the press. About 25 Democratic-Republican newspaper editors were charged under this act, and 10 were convicted of expressing opinions damaging to the government. A Vermont congressman, Matthew Lyon, was also locked up for saying that the president should be sent “to a mad house.” The voters re-elected Lyon while he was in jail.

The Democratic-Republicans, led by Jefferson and Madison, searched for a way to fight the Alien and Sedition Acts. They found it in a theory called states’ rights. According to this theory, states had rights that the federal government could not violate. Jefferson and Madison wrote resolutions (or statements) passed by the Kentucky and Virginia legislatures in 1798 and 1799. In the Kentucky Resolutions, Jefferson proposed nullification, the idea that a state could nullify a federal law within the state. In the Virginia Resolutions, Madison said a state could interpose, or place, itself between the federal government and its citizens. These resolutions declared that the Alien and Sedition Acts violated the Constitution. No other states supported Kentucky and Virginia. However, within two years the Democratic-Republicans won control of Congress, and they either repealed the Alien and Sedition Acts or let them expire.

Peace with France

While Federalists and Democratic-Republicans battled at home, Adams reopened talks with France. This time the two sides quickly signed the Convention of 1800, an agreement to stop all naval attacks.

Adams’s actions made him enemies among the Federalists, but he spoke proudly of having saved the nation from bloodshed. Adams lost the presidential election of 1800 to Thomas Jefferson. You will read more about Jefferson in the next chapter.

Freedom of the Press

Since the Alien and Sedition Acts, the Supreme Court has ruled many times that a free press had the right to publish information critical of or harmful to the government or government officials.

A free press has a responsibility to remain independent, not just from the government, but from individuals or groups which might influence its reporting. For instance, a newspaper or television network must be unafraid to cover a heavy advertiser accurately, even if a critical or negative story causes the company to pull its advertising. Editors and reporters must frequently report gifts they are given and financial holdings they may have.

To demonstrate accountability, most media outlets run corrections, when necessary, and letters from viewers or readers.
Chapter 9 ASSESSMENT

TERMS & NAMES
Briefly explain the significance of each of the following.
1. inaugurate
2. cabinet
3. tariff
4. Battle of Fallen Timbers
5. Whiskey Rebellion
6. neutral
7. foreign policy
8. political party
10. states’ rights

REVIEW QUESTIONS
Washington’s Presidency (pages 293–297)
1. What questions about the judiciary were left open by the Constitution? How were they answered? (HI1)
2. What financial problems did the new nation face? (HI1)
3. How did Hamilton and Jefferson interpret the Constitution differently? (REP5)

Challenges to the New Government (pages 298–302)
4. What did Washington do to secure the West? (HI1)
5. What were the major arguments regarding taxation under the new government? (REP5)
6. Why did Washington favor neutrality in the conflict between France and Britain? (HI1)
7. What problems did the Jay and Pinckney treaties address? (HI1)

The Federalists in Charge (pages 303–307)
8. Why did Washington oppose political parties? (HI1)
9. What was the XYZ Affair? (HI1)

CRITICAL THINKING

1. USING YOUR NOTES: IDENTIFYING AND SOLVING PROBLEMS

Using your completed chart, answer the questions. (HI2)
a. What were the problems that characterized the Federalist era?
b. What do the solutions to these problems reveal about the characteristics of the era?

2. ANALYZING LEADERSHIP
How did Washington’s efforts to serve as a symbol of national unity help the new nation? (HI1)

3. APPLYING CITIZENSHIP SKILLS
How might the farmers in the Whiskey Rebellion have expressed their disapproval of the whiskey tax while staying within the law? (HI4)

4. THEME: DEMOCRATIC IDEALS
Did the formation of political parties make the nation more or less democratic? (HI1)

How did the challenges of setting up a government that you discussed before you read the chapter compare with the actual challenges you read about?

The First Presidents (8.4.1)

Washington Presidency 1789–1797
- Strong Government
  - Cabinet
  - Judiciary
- Remaining Neutral
  - Jay’s Treaty
  - Pinckney’s Treaty
- Secure the West
  - Battle of Fallen Timbers
  - Treaty of Greenville

Adams Presidency 1797–1801
- Federalists vs. Democratic-Republicans
- Problems with France
  - XYZ Affair
  - Convention of 1800
- Differed over Constitution
- Disagreed on national bank
Financial Problems, 1789–1791

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DEBTS</th>
<th>EXPENSES</th>
<th>INCOME</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| $77,230,000 =
  total public debt | $4,270,000 =
  budget to run government | $4,400,000 =
  from duties or taxes imposed on imported and exported goods |

1. How much money did the government owe during the period shown on the chart? (8.3.4)
   A. $4,270,000
   B. $4,400,000
   C. $77,000,000
   D. $77,230,000

2. What could the government do to increase income? (8.3.4)
   A. decrease duties and taxes
   B. increase duties and taxes
   C. increase the national budget
   D. pay off the public debt

This quotation from George Washington’s Farewell Address is a warning to future leaders. Use this quotation and your knowledge of U.S. history to answer question 3.

PRIMARY SOURCE

Let me now . . . warn you . . . against the [harmful] effects of the spirit of party . . . . This spirit, unfortunately . . . exists in different shapes in all governments . . . but in those of the popular form, it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

George Washington, Farewell Address

3. What danger was Washington warning Americans about in his Farewell Address? (8.3.4)
   A. foreign governments
   B. Antifederalists
   C. political parties
   D. taxation

ALTERNATIVE ASSESSMENT

1. WRITING ABOUT HISTORY

Imagine that you are a U.S. citizen during the French Revolution. Write a letter to the secretary of state giving reasons why you think the United States should aid the French, aid the British, or remain neutral. (REP5)

- Use library resources to research the different sides.
- Use your research to persuade the secretary of state to your point of view.

2. COOPERATIVE LEARNING

Work with other students to research the Alien and Sedition Acts and the positions taken by both political parties. Consider these questions: Were the acts constitutional or an abuse of basic rights? Should criticism of the government be allowed in a time of possible war? Choose two group members to debate the Federalist and Democratic-Republican positions. (REP4)

INTEGRATED TECHNOLOGY

CREATING A CAMPAIGN COMMERCIAL

Create a 30-second television commercial for either John Adams, the Federalist party candidate, or Thomas Jefferson, the Democratic-Republican party candidate. (REP5)

- On the Internet, find information about your candidate that shows why he is a good choice.
- Locate at least two pictures that reveal different images of the candidate. Also, use the Internet to find suitable background music for the commercial.
- Use your resource materials to create a 30-second campaign commercial.

For more about the 1796 election . . .