LJH students benefit from learning CAD technology

Students in Ms. Ferguson's 8th grade science class have begun to learn how to use CAD (Computer Assisted Design) software for 3D printing applications.

CAD software is used in many vocations such as engineering, construction, architecture, and the automotive and manufacturing industries.

As a basic task to become familiar with the program, students created tag keychains with their names printed on them.

"It is a good opportunity for students to use skills that scientists use every day," noted Ferguson.

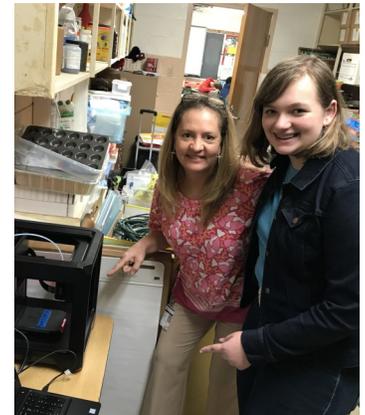

"Measuring length, adjusting and comparing sizes, and problem-solving."

Ferguson looks forward to her students creating models of atoms, working with models of the earth's changes, and tackling real-world design challenges.

LJH teachers in other content areas are also looking forward to using the software and 3D printer for exploring geometry, making physical maps of an area, and using the design process to create objects related to stories they read in class.

Learning CAD at Lincoln Junior High is a great start to career opportunities!

- Architectural drawings for bond projects are well underway, and construction is set to begin this summer. The high school track project will be completed in time for this spring's track season!
- COCISD bus driver and instructional aide Linda "LuLu" Blanks has driven three generations of the same family. A current student on her bus is the son and grandson of former students she drove. Ms. LuLu says she doesn't know how this is possible since she claims to be ONLY 34 years old.
