Choosing a major in college is one of the most difficult decisions students will have to make at this point in their lives. While some students have a passion in the sciences, others have a passion in the arts and have to decide if they should pursue their passion or settle for a higher education that they are not passionate about.

"Artists make our world colorful and interesting"

One of the primary reasons that people look down on art degrees is the idea that getting a degree in the arts will cost more money than an individual would be able to bring in. For these people, the idea of success is measured in the amount of money a person makes. The problem with this is that for some individuals, the more thought of following their passion is enough to justify their degree. These people value their craft enough to consider it a higher priority than money. Their passion drives them beyond the dollar sign. They would rather try. Plus, who wants a future president trying to wrestle with his own path. It doesn’t make the fact that they went on and make the art that we flock to ourselves and our posterity.

"For students who want to major in art or one of America's military categories. For students who want to make sure they don't live their entire lives being victim to debt, STEM is the right choice. According to Forbes.com, STEM subjects are far more valuable in today's digital economy and culture than a traditional liberal arts major such as philosophy or history."

The importance of STEM degrees

The importance of STEM degrees

Science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) are the fields that help to push the future of mankind. They make the art that we flock to, the movies and entertainment that we enjoy; our world would be dull and bland. They create the movies and entertainment that we enjoy; they make the art that we flock to museums to look at. They are people that deserve respect.

The fact that they went on and got a degree in something that they’re passionate about is admirable and should be recognized. Everyone has the right to choose their own path. It doesn’t make any sense to bully these students into majoring in STEM. These students aren’t better off participating in a subject they don’t care about for the sake of accommodating to the arrogance of others.

Saying Goodbye to Trump, not to Americans

An insight into Trump’s immigration reforms

Planning to close borders and send illegal immigrants back to their country with his immigration policy, it’s clear why Donald Trump would be the last person someone could want as our president.

No one in this country should agree with something that goes against what our nation is, a place where everyone is welcome from anywhere. Of course the topic of immigrants has two sides, but to run for presidency and attack a certain racial group truly fully labels Trump as a racist. Not only is it unethical to attack around Hispanics who take up a little over 50% of undocumented immigrants and build a 2,000 mile-wall across the southern border to stay away a very important right to our nation, birthright citizenship, proven by the preamble of the Constitution which states, “to secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our posterity.”

“The fourteenth amendment, clearly states, "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.” There is no such thing as an American because the only people here were Native Americans, being an American to be proud of your country because there is equality and freedom for all. You cannot be president and wipe out a huge part of the nation and throw people back to countless countries. If Donald Trump were president for a term, the judicial branch wouldn’t find it constitutional for the president to deport people back to their country because his policy became enforced, he would have to kick out practically everyone because the majority of the people in this country are immigrants. We can’t have a president whose motives are racist and biased, because one of the roles of the president is to work for the people’s best interest. Trump is the worst candidate to even consider voting for.

"If you come across one day (from the border) and you have a baby, all of a sudden. As for the next eighty years, we have to take care of them,” states Donald Trump.

Isn’t that strong enough to show what kind of person he is? He will be one who sees a majority of us as a burden. He only has to look at the border wall costs because for him it’s a waste of money to provide for the people. Everything about his immigration policy screams the qualities you don’t want in a president. Though legal immigrants would suffer from Trump’s policy in the long run, illegal immigrants who are illegal or have birthright citizenship would have to leave America, if Congress approves of his policy.
