To achieve total war, governments

• Summarize events that led to the end of the war.
• Analyze the causes and effects of American entry into the war.
• Explain the effect that years of warfare had on morale.
• Describe how World War I became a total war.

Winning the War

By 1917, European societies were cracking under the strain of war. Casualties on the fronts and shortages at home sapped morale. The stalemate dragged on, seemingly without end. Soon, however, the departure of one country from the war and the entry of another would tip the balance and end the stalemate.

Waging Total War

As the struggle wore on, nations realized that a modern, mechanized war required the channeling of an entire nation’s resources into the war effort, or total war. To achieve total war, governments began to take a stronger role in directing the economic and cultural lives of their people.

Economies Committed to War Production

Early on, both sides set up systems to recruit, arm, transport, and supply armies or other service. Britain, too, instituted conscription in 1916. “The draft,” which required all young men to be ready for military or other service, became a universal military practice.

Economic Warfare

At the start of the war, Britain’s navy formed a blockade in the North Sea to keep ships from carrying supplies into Germany. International law allowed wartime blockades as a means of stopping an enemy’s supply lines. However, the departure of one country from the war and the entry of another would tip the balance and end the stalemate.

Instruct

- Introduce: Key Terms Ask students to find the key term propaganda (in blue) in the text and explain its meaning. Point out that during World War I, governments used propaganda to raise morale and mobilize their citizens. Have students speculate on other ways that a government can try to control or influence public opinion.

- Teach Discuss the idea of a total war. Using the Numbered Heads strategy (TE, p. 723), ask How did governments manipulate their economies to support the war? (raised taxes, borrowed money, rationed goods, set prices, and forbade strikes) How did Britain strike at Germany’s economy? (Britain blocked Germany, so that Germany could not import needed goods.) How did Germany strike at Britain’s economy? (Germany tried to stop the flow of goods to Britain as well.)

- Analyzing the Visuals Point out the propaganda art on this page. Discuss the effects this poster may have had on a viewer. Then display Color Transparency 156: To the End, by Louis Raemaeker. Use the lesson suggested in the transparency book to guide a discussion on how propaganda art was used in World War I.

to confiscate contraband, or military supplies and raw materials needed to make military supplies, but not items such as food and clothing. In spite of international law, the British blockade stopped both types of goods from reaching Germany. As the war progressed, it became harder and harder to feed the German and Austrian people. In Germany, the winter of 1916 and 1917 was remembered as “the turnip winter,” because the potato crop failed and people ate turnips instead.

To retaliate, Germany used U-boats to create its own blockade. In 1915, Germany declared that it would sink all ships carrying goods to Britain. In May 1915, a German submarine torpedoed the British liner Lusitania off the coast of Ireland. Almost 1,200 passengers were killed, including 128 Americans. Germany justified the attack, arguing that the Lusitania was carrying weapons. When American President Woodrow Wilson threatened to cut off diplomatic relations with Germany, though, Germany agreed to restrict its submarine campaign. Before attacking any ship, U-boats would surface and give warning, allowing neutral passengers to escape to lifeboats. Unrestricted submarine warfare stopped—for the moment.

Propaganda War Total war also meant controlling public opinion. Even in democratic countries, special boards censored the press. Their aim was to keep complete casualty figures and other discouraging news from reaching the public. Government censors also restricted popular literature, historical writings, motion pictures, and the arts.

Both sides waged a propaganda war. Propaganda is the spreading of ideas to promote a cause or to damage an opposing cause. Governments used propaganda to motivate military mobilization, especially in Britain before conscription started in 1916. In France and Germany, propaganda urged civilians to loan money to the government. Later in the war, Allied propaganda piled up the brutality of Germany’s invasion of Belgium. The British and French prose circulated tales of atrocities, horrible acts... committed against innocent people. Although some atrocities did occur, often the stories were distorted by exaggerations or completely made up.

Women Join the War Effort

Women played a critical role in total war. As millions of men went to fight, women took over their jobs and kept national economies going. Many women worked in war industries, manufacturing weapons and supplies. Others joined women’s branches of the armed forces. When food shortages threatened Britain, volunteers in the Women’s Land Army went to the fields to grow their nation’s food. Nurses shared the dangers of the men whose wounds they tended. At aid stations close to the front lines, nurses often worked around the clock, especially after a big “push” brought a flood of casualties. In her diary, English nurse Vera Brittain describes sweating through 90-degree days in France, “stopping hemorrhages, replacing intestines, and draining and reinserting innumerable rubber tubes” with “gruesome human remnants heaped on the floor.”

War gave women a new sense of pride and confidence. After the war, most women had to give up their jobs to men returning home. Still, they had challenged the idea that women could not handle demanding and dangerous jobs. In many countries, including Britain, Germany, and the United States, women’s support for the war effort helped them finally win the right to vote, after decades of struggle.

Checkpoint

Why was it important for both sides to keep civilian morale high during the war?

Morale Collapses

Despite inspiring propaganda, by 1917 the morale of troops and civilians had plunged. Germany was spending 15-year-old recruits to the front. Britain was on the brink of bankruptcy. Germany was sending 15-year-olds to the front. In Russia, soldiers left the front to join in a full-scale revolution back home. In Italy, many soldiers deserted during the retreat at Caporetto. In Russia, sol-

Long casualty lists, food shortages, and the failure of gen-

Nurse

Nurses like Edith Cavell played an important role in caring for the sick and wounded during World War I. Today, nurses work to prevent disease, promote health, and help patients cope with illness. With today’s aging population and changing health care system, nursing is a continually expanding field. They work in a variety of environments from hospitals and nursing homes to schools and rehabilitation centers.

Besides dealing directly with patients, nurses also work in administration, management, or research. A registered nurse must first pass a national licensing exam and must have at least a hospital diploma or an associate’s degree or bachelor’s degree in nursing. It’s a good career option for those who enjoy working with people, and are caring, sympathetic, responsible, and detail-oriented.

Edith Cavell

Like most ordinary people caught up in war, Edith Cavell (1865–1915) did not plan on becoming a hero. An English nurse, she was in charge of a hospital in Belgium. After the German invasion, Cavell cared for wounded soldiers on both sides. She also helped Allied soldiers escape to the Netherlands.

In 1915, the Germans arrested Cavell for spying. As she faced a firing squad, her last reported words were, “Standing as I do in view of God and Humanity, I realize that punishment is not enough. I must have no hatred or bitterness toward anyone.” Why do you think the British government spread the story of Edith Cavell?

The United States Declares War/Victory at Last

Instruct
- Introduce: Ask students to recall the state of the Allied cause in 1917. Have them predict how the entry of the United States on the side of the Allies will affect the morale of both sides.
- Teach: Review the reasons the United States declared war against the Central Powers. Then point out that although the United States declared war in April 1917, troops did not arrive in Europe until 1918. Ask: How did the Central Powers try to take advantage of the delay? (They pushed to win the war before American troops arrived.) What was the outcome of this strategy? (The Germans pushed back troops on the Western Front, but were unable to win before American reinforcements arrived.)
- Quick Activity: Display Transparency 160: The Fourteen Points. Use the lesson suggested in the transparency book to guide a discussion about Wilson's terms for resolving the conflict.
- Color Transparencies, 160

Independent Practice
Have students suppose that they are living in the United States during 1917. Ask them to write a letter to the editor explaining whether or not the United States should enter the war. Letters should refer to the Zimmerman Note and Germany's decision to resume unrestricted submarine warfare.

Monitor Progress
- As students work on their letters, circulate to ensure they understand how opinion on entering the war shifted during this time.
- Check Reading and Note Taking: Study Guide entries for student understanding.

Answers
- Poor morale, among other factors, led to revolution in Russia and Russia's eventual withdrawal from the war, which weakened the Allies.

The United States Declares War

From after the Russian Revolution began, however, another event altered the balance of forces. The United States declared war on Germany. Many factors contributed to the decision of the United States to exchange neutrality for war in 1917.

Why Join the Allies? Many Americans supported the Allies because of cultural ties. The United States shared a cultural history and language with Britain and sympathized with France as another democracy. On the other hand, some German Americans favored the Central Powers. So did many Irish Americans, who resented British rule of Ireland, and Russian Jews, who did not want to be allied with the tsar. On the other hand, some German Americans favored the Central Powers. So did many Irish Americans, who resented British rule of Ireland, and Russian Jews, who did not want to be allied with the tsar.

Germany had ceased submarine attacks in 1915 after pressure from President Wilson. However, in early 1917, Germany was desperate to break the stalemate. On February 1, the German government announced that it would resume unrestricted submarine warfare. Wilson angrily denounced Germany. Also, in early 1917, the British intercepted a message from the German foreign minister, Arthur Zimmermann, to his ambassador in Mexico. In the note, Zimmermann authorized his ambassador to propose that Germany would help Mexico “to reconquer the lost territory in New Mexico, Texas, and Arizona” in return for Mexican support against the United States. Britain revealed the Zimmermann note to the American government. When the note became public, anti-German feeling intensified in the United States.

Declaring War. In April 1917, Wilson asked Congress to declare war on Germany. “We have no selfish ends to serve,” he stated. Instead, he painted the conflict idealistically as a war “to make the world safe for democracy” and later as a “war to end war.”

The United States needed months to recruit, train, supply, and transport a modern army across the Atlantic. But by 1918, about two million American soldiers had joined the war-weary Allied troops fighting on the Western Front. Although relatively few American troops engaged in combat, their arrival gave Allied troops a much-needed morale boost. Just as important to the debt-ridden Allies was American financial aid.
The Fourteen Points

Though he had failed to maintain American neutrality, Wilson still hoped to be a peacemaker. In January 1919, he issued the Fourteen Points, a list of his terms for resolving the war and future wars. He called for freedom of the seas, free trade, large-scale reductions of arms, and an end to secret treaties. For Eastern Europe, Wilson favored self-determination, the right of people to choose their own form of government. Finally, Wilson urged the creation of a “general association of nations” to keep the peace in the future.

Victory at Last

A final showdown on the Western Front began in early 1918. The Germans badly wanted to achieve a major victory before eager American troops arrived in Europe. In March, the German army launched a huge offensive that by July had pushed the Allies back 40 miles. These efforts exhausted the Germans, however, and by then American troops were arriving by the thousands. The Allies then launched a counterattack, slowly driving German forces back across France and Belgium. In September, German generals told the kaiser that the war could not be won. Uprisings exploded among hungry city dwellers across Germany. German commanders advised the kaiser to step down. William II did so in early November, fleeing into exile in the Netherlands.

By autumn, Austria-Hungary was also reeling toward collapse. As the government in Vienna tottered, the subject nationalities revolted, splintering the empire of the Hapsburgs. Bulgaria and the Ottoman empire also asked for peace. The new German government sought an armistice, or agreement to end fighting, with the Allies. At 11 a.m. on November 11, 1918, the Great War at last came to an end.

Checkpoint: Why did Germany ask the Allies for an armistice in November 1918?

Celebrating the Armistice

On the globe, crowds celebrated the end of the war. Here, British and American soldiers and civilians wave the American and French flags in relief and jubilation.

The Allies were weakened when Russia left the war, but were strengthened when the United States joined. The Germans attempted one last drive, but it failed and morale in Germany plummeted. The Allies were able to drive the Germans back. The government in Germany toppled and the new one asked for peace.
