

Youth Bereavement Program

Permission to Grieve

Tears Are Okay

When someone a child loves dies, many feelings flood their heart; many thoughts and unanswered questions fill their heads. It is important for children to understand that it is okay for them to feel mad, sad, happy and even scared.

Often times, talking about death does not occur in the home, or maybe just on a very limited basis. The Youth Bereavement Program offered by Hemet Hospice Volunteers, Inc. provides a platform for children to express hidden emotions and feelings often suppressed due to family circumstances.

Our Youth Bereavement Program curriculum is designed to address key components of grief in an age-appropriate manner as an effort to foster the development of healthy coping mechanisms which will aid in the child's academic success, future goals and accomplishments.

The Program is made up of several key components:

An 8-week, in-school support group, In-Service and Education for Academic Professionals who wish to learn key warning signs concerning a grieving child, and a Crisis Response Team for schools who have been faced with an unexpected tragedy.
