Course Description

This course is to investigate the issue of censorship from multiple perspectives. In the process, students will have the opportunity to reflect upon their own values and their thoughts about the role of literature in shaping them. Students will study the history of censoring and analyze debates for and against censorship. Students will study a section of historically banned and/or challenged novels alongside other media that either comments on, embraces, or reflects viewpoints about censorship. In addition to scholarly articles and historical documents, readings may include literary works such as A Separate Peace, Speak, Water for Elephants, The Kite Runner, Inherit the Wind, various children's' books, and challenged materials in music, film, and television.

The room will be divided into four different sections, labeled as such: strongly agree, somewhat agree, somewhat disagree and strongly disagree. After a prompt is given, students will be required to take a stance, and then at least one or two people (or more) from each corner will explain their position. Often times, students from different “corners” discover that they actually have very similar viewpoints, but that they interpreted the prompt differently. Alternately, some students in the same corner may realize that the position themselves in the same corner but might have different reasons for taking that stance. The four corners activity will also be extended into a writing prompt. ● Case Study of Hazelwood School District vs. Kuhlmeir Students will review and discuss

Some people believe that both of these theories are possible at the same time; in other words, they believe no one knows exactly how long it took God to make man nor how He did it--perhaps He did it through evolution. Your assignment is to write a composition in which you state your own views on the subject. How do you think man came to exist? Do you believe in creationism, evolution, a combination of the two, or something else entirely?

Essential Questions:	Objectives:	Activities, Investigation, and Student Experiences:
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ● How does censoring/challenging movies, TV, music differ from other written work? ● Can censorship be justified in some circumstances but not in others? ● How is personal preference for music, film and television developed? ● In what ways have people used music, film and television to express their values and describe their experiences? ● How do music, film and television and history influence each other? ● How does culture affect music, television and film? 	Students will be able to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ● Understand that group and cultural influences contribute to human development, identity and behavior ● Identify figurative language ● Determine a theme or central idea of a text (film, song, TV show) and analyze in detail its development over the course of the text, including how it emerges and is shaped and refined by specific details; provide an objective summary of the text ● Determine the meaning of words and phrases as they are used in the text, including figurative and connotative meanings; analyze the cumulative impact of specific word choices on meaning and tone ● Integrate multiple sources of information presented in diverse media or formats evaluating the credibility and accuracy of each source. ● Evaluate a speaker’s point of view, reasoning, and use of evidence and rhetoric, identifying any fallacious reasoning or exaggerated or distorted evidence ● develop the skill of looking for textual evidence 	Sample Assignments <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ● Movie and Television Rating System Debate and Overhaul High school students are directly affected by movie and television ratings because in their recent history, they were considered “too young” for PG-13 movies, and at their current ages, nearly all of them are too young to get into a rated R movie. Students will analyze the current rating system, discuss how and why it has evolved (PG-13 today is not PG-13 from 15 years ago). They will discuss the relative merits of having a rating system as well as the difficulties of creating and using a rating system. Finally, students will think critically about both themes and levels of “censorable” material in television and movies and, in groups of 3-4, devise their own rating system with at least 4 different levels (like G, PG, PG-13, R). Their levels cannot have the same designations as the current system. They must also include at least 4-5 different categories on which to base the ratings (violence, language, sexual content, depiction of negative

		stereotypes etc.) This activity requires students to examine their own values/beliefs when they have to decide what should be rated and how. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ● Music Censorship Students will explore and discuss music censorship in terms of being “environmentally-appropriate.” Students will bring in music from their own lives and discuss where certain lyrics are appropriate or inappropriate and why. Students will also read an article about Wal-Mart refusing to carry certain music artists or albums because the album cover art or music lyrics go against Wal-Mart corporation’s beliefs. Students will discern what those beliefs are and, in effect, what beliefs are rejected by Wal-Mart’s censorship of this material.

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ● Does a culture / community / institution have the right to censor its artists? ● What are book bans and challenges, and what are some reasons why certain books are banned/challenged? ● Why is access to books important? ● What impact do book bans/challenges have on authors? Each group reviews 3 different toys and fills in a chart that helps them look at each toy in very different ways. First, students list anything objectionable about the toy, even if it is a stretch of the imagination – anything that anyone might find wrong with the toy, from the way it looks to its function to the values it could potentially convey. Next, students look at the flipside: what are some positive values of this toy? Even if they do not personally agree, student groups list every aspect they can in both categories. This is the first of a few activities designed as “warm-ups” to get students to look at various cultural objects and ideas in different ways. Examples of toys: Barbie, G.I. Joe, Cookie Monster, Jesus Action Figure, “Bobo” clown dolls (basically punching bags for kids), Realistic Baby dolls (that cry, require “diaper change & feeding), Baby dolls marketed specifically to boys, The game “Cowboys and Indians”, The game

Students should be creative - consider a villain burning books, etc. ● Celebrating Banned Books Characters Students will celebrate characters from banned books through: dress-up, drawing, creating a poster, or an “In Defense of [-character-]” essay. Students should speak or write in the first person as their character (outside of the essay) describing who they are and why they should not be banned.
