Local Student Completes Explo at Yale on the Campus of Yale University

New Haven, CT: Madi Strasmann successfully completed the Explo 360 summer program on the campus of Yale University. Explo 360 is a three-week enrichment program in the applied liberal arts that promotes creativity, engagement, and intellectual daring.

Fourteen hundred motivated and talented students from across the United States and 70 countries attended the program. These students chose from more than 150 courses and workshops ranging from genetic engineering and women in the media to international conflict resolution.

In addition, students went on trips to cultural and recreational sites across New England and New York, participated in a broad array of sports, artistic and scientific activities, and engaged in community service work. Rounding out their experience was the ability to learn from prominent scholars-in-residence like New York Times bestselling author Kelly Corrigan.

Moira Kelly, president of Explo, says: "Allowing students to explore the world of people and ideas without the pressure of grades means students can reconnect with their curiosity and creativity, two things too often lost in school. Doing that with talented peers from around the world is simply inspiring and often leads students to move from learning to know to learning to do."

Founded as a not-for-profit organization in 1976, Explo is an international leader in summer enrichment, featuring programs on the campuses of Yale University (grades 10-12), Wellesley College (grades 8 & 9), and Wheaton College (grades 2-7). Explo has an alumni network of more than 70,000 former students and faculty, including more than 25 members of Forbes Magazine's annual "30 Under 30" list.
